

United Cargo Jet Fuel Index

United Cargo publishes a fuel index based on representative jet fuel prices from around the world. This index is one of several sources of market data considered to determine United Cargo’s fuel surcharge level. United Cargo bases its decisions on whether to implement, rescind, or increase a fuel surcharge in part using this index as well as other market indicators such as the price of jet fuel and local government requirements. United Cargo reserves the right to apply different fuel surcharge amounts when required by local governments or local market conditions.

The following chart graphically illustrates the jet fuel index level indication that is considered in setting fuel surcharge rates. United Cargo intends to publish this information on this site every week pending the availability of the component information.

Average Weekly Jet Fuel Index - 3 Months

100 = 53.8¢/gallon

Average Jet Fuel Index for the week ending January 29: 361

Methodology

Subject to market conditions, United Cargo will consider implementing or revising its surcharge whenever the index equals or exceeds the indicated level for two consecutive weeks. Conversely, when jet fuel prices decrease, causing the index to decline, United Cargo will consider reducing the surcharge to the appropriate surcharge level. Upon attainment of a threshold level and determination of an appropriate surcharge based on review of all relevant market conditions, United Cargo will announce, for immediate effect, the appropriate fuel surcharge level for all shipments two weeks hence.
